Chronicle Graphics launches education services

Project management software company now a Registered Education Provider with the Project Management Institute

CENTENNIAL, COLO - June 15, 2009 - Chronicle Graphics, makers of OnePager and TimeArrow project visualization software, and thought leaders in the project management industry, announced today a new series of seminars for Project Management Professionals.

Offered through the Project Management Institute's Registered Education Provider program, Chronicle Graphics' first course offerings focus on multi-tasking and how best to manage it. Project managers will study the psychological constructs of multi-tasking, its effects on project teams, and the tools and techniques that are best suited to optimize people's tendency to multi-task.

Courses are held monthly, and are offered as seminars in the Denver metro area or as webinars worldwide. Project management professionals earn four Professional Development Units (PDUs) upon completion of the training.

As a part of this new launch, Chronicle Graphics has expanded its website to include an education section, which provides more details about the courses, and offers easy online registration.

About Chronicle Graphics
